I will know how to use fronted adverbials to structure an argument.

I will know how to use fronted adverbials to structure an argument.

Learn it: fronted adverbials can be used to structure your argument. Every time you introduce a new argument you should start a new paragraph and use a fronted adverbial to start it.

Here are some examples of fronted adverbials you could use.

Practice it: can you place a suitable fronted adverbial in front of these three arguments.

Firstly, I like break time because I get to go outside.

In addition, I enjoy break time because I get to spend time with my friends.

Finally, Break time is my favourite part of the day because I get a break from learning.

Independent work: write 1 argument for why you like your favourite hobby and start it with a fronted adverbial.

Circle the most appropriate fronted adverbial to start the sentence.

Add a fronted adverbial to the beginning of these arguments to structure the argument.

Write three arguments and use fronted adverbials at the beginning of each.
