

The father was on his way home when he thought, "I forgot all about the rose for Belle!" All at once, the sky turned black. "Oh, dear!" he said. "A storm is coming!" A moment later, heavy dark rains fell from the sky. Soaking wet and tired, the father saw a blink of light from far away. He went closer to the light, hoping it meant there was some place he could ask to stay the night. When he got up close, he saw a large palace with candles in all its windows. It was very odd, but the garden gate was open. And so with care, the father stepped in.

"Hello?" he said. No answer. There, before him, was a great feast over a long table. "Hello?" he said again. Still, no answer. The father sat down in front of the fire to warm himself, and he waited. But still, no one came. "I suppose it would be all right if I stay the night," said the father. As he took a quick bite from the feast, the small cup on the table moved and spoke to him.

Belle's father jumped up, scared, and ran out of the palace immediately. On the way out he passed a rose garden. "I will take just one," he panted nervously. And he picked a rose for Belle. Just then, a loud stomp came up from behind him. "You took my rose!" roared the Beast ferociously. The father spun around. There before him was an awful, huge monster. "I... I'm sorry!" he said. "I didn't know."
