Example

The castle loomed over like a menacing giant, sitting amongst a forest of mystery and danger. Clouds of mist floated overhead, with eyes like daggers looking down below. The halls of the castle were as dark as the night, luring in it's victims. It's creeping shadow was a blanket of nightmares seeping into every corner.

The small cottage was perched in a village near the woods, it's bricks as old as the hills. It was surprising how it was still standing and yet it was alive and welcoming, a warm ribbon of smoke rising from the old chimney. It's walls were filled with love and happy memories of hundred of years. It's garden was a sea of colour and light, with flowers as beautiful as the stars.

The night was a cold ice berg, melting when the moon came out and the street started to shimmer. The buildings camouflaged next to the fresh night sky. The cobbled road twinkled in the night sky like stars. That was the only source of light there. The other dim, faint lights made no effort in giving lift. The horse-cart looked like faint shadows. The night was cool, full of breeze; the wind was as fierce as a lion, pushing the trees.
